

a quick
brown fox
jumps over
the lazy dog

third: the lefthanded calligrapher's writing hand, if held naturally, would follow the pen across the words already written. as the ink is wet, the following hand smears it and spoils the work. in pencil or ballpoint this is less of an issue than with calligraphy ink, which can take a long time to dry. this leads to potentially intense disappointment